

Islamitisch bankieren

Storm Visser - Midden-Oosten Studies

Rente is niet toegestaan in de Islam dus gebruiken ze twee andere systemen voor leenen

1:
Mudharabah

2: Murabaha

Ook op de aandelenmarkt is het zeer limiterend

Design by  Haywood Sener

SHARIA

THE LAW AND GOLD

Sponsored by

Sharia is the legal system of the Islamic world.

Derived from the Koran (the Muslim holy book), the Hadith (conduct of the prophet Muhammad) and Fatwas (Islamic scholarly rulings) it extends beyond civil and criminal justice law to also regulate all aspects of a Muslim's life.

Historically gold-investing has been problematic under Sharia law as it is considered a Ribawi item.

 Ribawi items must be sold on weight and measures, therefore as an asset, gold is Sharia compliant.

 Gold cannot however be traded for future value (interest) or for speculation.

 Confusion over gold as an investment means most people invest in jewellery and coins.

Islamic code's influence on investing

The Islamic financial world works within rules known as Shariah, which prohibits making money from money and profiting from things considered immoral.

Islamic finance, under the rules of the Shariah

Charging, or paying interest is prohibited; companies can get income from an asset as an equivalent of selling bonds

Profiting from alcohol, gambling and weapons is prohibited

Investors purchase then trade or sell commodities like copper or metals to get a return without earning interest

Owning stocks is allowed, companies must be debt free and non-objectional

Er is dus veel geld in Islamitische financiële instellingen

Einde

